

SCIENTIFIC PERSPECTIVES IN FUNDAMENTAL THEOLOGY

Understanding Christian Faith in the Age of Scientific Reason

Giuseppe Tanzella-Nitti

Claremont Press,
Claremont, CA

Scientific Perspectives in Fundamental Theology
Understanding the Christian Faith in the Age of Scientific Reason

©2022 Claremont Press
1325 N. College Ave
Claremont, CA 91711

ISBN

Library of Congress Cataloging-in-Publication Data

Scientific Perspectives in Fundamental Theology Understanding the Christian Faith in the Age of Scientific Reason / Giuseppe Tanzella-Nitti xvi + 485 pp. 22 x 15 cm.
Includes bibliographical references and index.
ISBN

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Preface	ix
Foreword	xi
Table of Abbreviations	xv
Introduction	1

PART I: FUNDAMENTAL THEOLOGY WITHIN THE SCIENTIFIC CONTEXT

Chapter 1. Speaking of God in the contemporary scientific world	13
1.1. Fundamental Theology's function of prolonging ad extra the mission of the Word into the world	13
1.2. Revelation as a historical event: the interdisciplinary nature of Fundamental Theology	17
1.3. Is Fundamental Theology a model of theology suitable for a university campus?	29
Chapter 2. The credibility of Revelation and scientific rationality	39
2.1 Contemporary scientific thought shapes the interlocutor's rationality and calls for a synthesis between faith and reason	41
2.2 What makes the Revealer and the witness credible?
2.3 What makes the content of Revelation meaningful and non-contradictory?	51
2.4 How risky and uncertain is it to believe?	62
Chapter 3. Contemporary criticisms of the question of God within the context of the natural sciences	67
3.1 The rise of "new atheism" in contemporary postmodern society	71
3.2 Is Nature enough? "Scientific" naturalism and the origin of a misunderstanding	82

Chapter 4. The question of God within the context of science: the logos of scientific rationality and its openness to the Absolute	93
4.1 The incompleteness of language and the search for its foundation: room for semantics beyond syntax	95
4.2 The quest for the foundation of reality: the ontological incompleteness of the physical universe and the ultimate understanding of the world's existence	99
4.3 The recognition of order and rationality: acknowledging the existence of a logos ut ratio	104
4.4 Scientific activity as a dialogue with the Absolute: the perception of a logos ut verbum	109

PART II: GOD'S SELF-REVELATION THROUGH THE CREATED WORLD

Chapter 5. Revelation as the personal self-giving of the Blessed Trinity to the world	121
5.1 Approaching the notion of Revelation	121
5.2 Revelation of the Logos and theology of the Word	123
5.3 The personalistic dimension of God's revelation and its relationship with the Trinitarian missions of the Son and of the Holy Spirit	129
5.4 Sophia, the mediating wisdom of God's personal revelation to creation	134
Chapter 6. God's manifestation in nature between religious experience and scientific world-views	145
6.1 Is there room for divine revelation in nature?	148
6.2 The personalistic dimension of human enquiry concerning the foundation of natural reality	156
Chapter 7. The metaphor of the Two Books: an intriguing historical path	165
7.1 The theological import of the metaphor of the Two Books	166
7.2 The development of the metaphor within Christian Tradition	172
7.3 Raymond of Sebond's influential Liber creaturarum	180

7.4 Who can read the Book of Nature? The understanding of the metaphor in the Modern Age	184
Chapter 8. God's revelation through creation, between Covenant and Promise	199
8.1 The revealing dimension of creation: some hermeneutic clarifications	202
8.2 Relevant biblical pages and emblematic passages	206
8.3 God's revelation in nature supports the apostolic kerygma : St Paul's speeches at Athens and Lystra	218
8.4 Theological questions raised by the re-evaluation of God's revelation in nature	222
8.5 Recognizing the Logos in the created world: a contemporary propaedeutic for the proclamation of the Gospel	230

PART III: SCIENTIFIC PERSPECTIVES ON CHRISTIAN REVELATION

Chapter 9. History of the cosmos and the history of salvation: the uniqueness of Christian events and the universality of the scientific approach	239
9.1 The space-time context of God's revelation to human beings	240
9.2 Philosophical implications of a historical revelation of God within the cosmic scenario	248
9.3 The world and the Word: the relevance to science of a universe created in Christ and in sight of Christ	254
9.4 Philosophical realism, rationality, and the dialogical dimension of the natural world	258
9.5 The enigma of information: a native component of a cosmos created in the Word-Logos, and a source of meaning for an evolving universe	262
9.6 The created universe belongs to the Paschal Mystery of Christ	266
9.7 Concluding remarks	270

Chapter 10. The Revelation of God in an evolving cosmos: the appearance of Homo Sapiens on Earth and the question of life in the universe	273
10.1 The human being's historical response to divine Revelation along his biological and cultural path	275
10.2 The place of Judaeo-Christian Revelation within the context of the religious prehistory of humanity	285
10.3 The appearance of life in the cosmos: the theological debate about intelligent extraterrestrial life	299
10.4 The meaning and intelligibility of Christian teaching in facing a possible diffusion of life in the cosmos	311
Chapter 11. Philosophical Darwinism and the critique of God's revelation in nature and history	321
11.1 Knowing God starting from Nature: the Darwinian criticism of Natural Theology	324
11.2 Natural selection and the problem of cosmic evil	341
Chapter 12. Divine action in nature within the context of the epistemology of the laws of nature	359
12.1 Philosophical criticism of the possibility of miracles and the problem of their recognition	360
12.2 Understanding divine action in nature: some historical and philosophical interpretations	389
Chapter 13. The revelation of ultimate realities: the cosmic dimension of Christian eschatology	411
13.1 Physical implications suggested by the theological canon of continuity and discontinuity between the first and the new creation	412
13.2 Time, matter, and eternity	424
13.3 Survival of the personal identity of the human being: ancient questions and contemporary insights	433
Epilogue	453
Incipit of Documents from the Catholic Church	459
Bibliography	461
Name Index	477
Sources of the English text	485